Environmental issues that were being world attention today are showing that people are increasingly aware of the importance to protecting the environment, this was a great opportunity for companies to create products that are environmentally friendly. This research was based on the lack of public knowledge about the environment and the lack of public awareness of the presence of environmental friendly products. For this reason, companies must be able to determine promotion strategies to provide awareness of the environmental issues and environmental friendly products. The purpose of this research was to analyze the effect of Green Promotion and Green Knowledge on Green Brand Awareness. This study was compiled by using a survey method by distributing questionnaires and filled in by consumers of The Body Shop in Tasikmalaya with a non-probability sampling technique of purposive sampling. The analysis tool used is Path Analysis. The results of the study show that green promotion and green knowledge have an influence on green brand awareness.
